Conferences are an important part of academic life. They provide an opportunity to share findings and ideas, engage in dialogue and debate with other researchers, and build links with professional communities. This seminar considers how presenters can make the most of conferences.

- How should we prepare for conferences?
- What forms of presentation are most effective when limited time is available?
- How might conversations that begin with conference presentations continue?
- What can we do with our work after conferences?

This seminar for academic staff and postgraduate students will tackle these questions and others.

12.00-1.00
Tuesday 18 June 2013
Wheki 205

Presenters:
Susan Lovett & Peter Roberts

This is an initiative of the Educational Theory, Policy and Practice Research Hub
Inquiries: susan.lovett@canterbury.ac.nz or peter.roberts@canterbury.ac.nz